Dear Parents,

We are pleased to share the latest edition of our school St. Peter's Model School - SPMSREVIEW, our newsletter. Inside, you will find highlights from recent events and activities, important announcements and key dates for the weeks ahead. This initiative sought to instill in our students a profound respect of every form of work and appreciation of the invaluable contributions made by individuals across diverse professions.

Theme : Human Rights: Inspire for Change

Human rights are the foundation of a fair, equal, and compassionate society. They remind us that every individual deserves dignity, respect, freedom, and equal opportunities, regardless of their background.

The theme "Human Rights – Inspire for Change" encourages us to move beyond awareness and take meaningful action. Change can begin with simple acts—speaking up against injustice, respecting differences, promoting equality, and standing beside those whose voices are often unheard.

As responsible citizens, we have the power to create a world where kindness replaces discrimination and understanding overcomes prejudice. When we respect the rights of others, we contribute to a better tomorrow. Let us be the voice, the strength, and the inspiration for positive change.

Student Corner – Voices of Tomorrow

Students are the heart of every school, bringing fresh ideas, creativity, energy, and endless possibilities. Student Corner is a platform to celebrate their talents, thoughts, achievements, and unique perspectives. It is a space where young voices shine, ideas take flight, and every contribution reflects the spirit of learning and growth.

INSPIRE – Be the Change

We often hear the words, "Be the change you want to see in the world." But what does it really mean? Does it mean that we have to become famous, powerful or rich to make a difference? I don't think so. According to me, being the change simply means doing something good from our side instead of always waiting for someone else to do it.

Many times, we think that we are too young to change anything. We may think, "I am only a student. What difference can I make?" But I believe that age is not a barrier to making a difference. In fact, young people have the power to bring new ideas and new thinking into society.

Another way of being the change is by speaking up when something is wrong. Sometimes we see someone being treated unfairly, but we remain silent because we are afraid of what others might say. Of course, we should always choose a safe and sensible way to deal with problems, but we should not believe that staying silent is always the answer. If we see something wrong, we can tell a trusted adult, teacher or responsible person.

Education is also a powerful way to bring change. Education is not only about getting marks or passing exams. It teaches us how to think, understand and make better decisions. An educated person can help others understand important issues and can contribute to society.

We can also inspire others through our own actions. Imagine a student who studies honestly instead of cheating in an examination. Other students may notice it. Imagine someone who returns a lost object instead of keeping it. That person is showing honesty without giving a lecture about honesty. Actions often speak louder than words.

We should also understand that becoming a change-maker does not mean becoming perfect. We all make mistakes. I make mistakes too. Sometimes we may waste water, get angry, ignore someone or make a wrong decision. What matters is that we learn from our mistakes and try to improve ourselves.

Social media is another place where young people can create change. Today, one message can reach thousands of people. We can use social media to spread useful information, support good causes and encourage positive behaviour. But we should also be careful about what we share. Not everything we see online is true. Before forwarding something, we should check whether it is actually correct.

There are many people in history who inspired others not just through their words but through their lives. Mahatma Gandhi showed the power of non-violence. Dr. A.P.J. Abdul Kalam inspired millions of students to dream and work hard. Mother Teresa dedicated her life to helping people in need. We may not become exactly like these great personalities, but we can learn something from their lives.

The most important thing is to start small. Sometimes we think that our one action is too small to matter. But every big change starts with small steps. One person inspires another person, and that person inspires someone else. Slowly, an entire group can change. The world does not need everyone to become a great leader. It needs ordinary people doing good things every day. A student can inspire a class. A class can inspire a school. A school can inspire a community. And a community can inspire the world. So, let us not wait for someone else to make the world better. Let us take the first step ourselves. Let us be kind when we can, honest when it is difficult, brave when something is wrong and helpful whenever someone needs us.

Human Rights: Building a Better Society

A school is not only a place for academic learning but also a space where children learn to respect differences, listen to others, cooperate, and stand against discrimination. Through classroom discussions, activities, stories, and real-life examples, teachers can help students understand that everyone has the right to be treated fairly and with dignity.

Promoting human rights among children begins with small actions—respecting classmates, being kind to others, helping those in need, accepting different opinions, and resolving disagreements peacefully. These simple values can create a culture of empathy and mutual respect.

As teachers, let us empower our students to become responsible citizens who value equality, speak with compassion, and contribute positively to society. When we educate children about rights and responsibilities together, we take a meaningful step towards building a more peaceful and harmonious world.
